Non Disclosure Agreement (NDA)

We understand that customers may request an NDA document if their product is protected by confidentiality. In cases where the NDA requires legal expertise for approval, the cost will be charged to the party initiating the NDA.

We generally do not wish to receive detailed information about the customer's product; we only require information about the part we are responsible for.

We often handle various designs and inventions where information must be kept internal and see no issues in maintaining a high ethical and professional standard throughout the process without an NDA. All products are also customer-specific, which in practice means that no one else has access to this particular product.

However, transformers/inductors are a well-known and 'mature' product, where much knowledge is widely available and fundamentally easy to copy.
